Rashi in His Own Words

שמות ב', י"ד: ויאמר מי שמה לאיש שר ושפט עלינו הלהרגני אתה אמר כצ'שר הרגת את המצרי ויירא משה ויאמר אכן נודע הדבר:

רש"י ד"ה ויירא משה: כפשוטו. ומדרשו דאג לו על שראה בישראל רשעים דלטורין, אמר מעתה שמא אינם ראויין להגאל:

Shemos 2:14: And he retorted, "Who made you a man, a prince, and a judge over us? Do you plan to slay me as you have slain the Egyptian?" Moshe became frightened and said, "Indeed, the matter has become known!"

Rashi Heading - Moshe became frightened: (This is to be explained) according to its simple meaning, (namely, that Moshe was afraid that “Paroh – Pharaoh” would kill him). According to the Midrash, it is interpreted to mean that he was worried because he saw in Israel wicked men, informers. He said that since this is so, perhaps the Jews do not deserve to be redeemed!

Synopsis

This week's Torah portion, Shemos, is the beginning of the second book of the Torah. Here, the Torah describes how Paroh's daughter raised Moshe in her father's palace. He leaves there to see what the situation is with his fellow Jews. He saw an Egyptian taskmaster beating a Jewish slave. Moshe slays the Egyptian. The next day, he saw two Jews fighting with each other, and tells them to stop. They respond by asking him whether he plans on killing them, as he killed the Egyptian. The verse tells us that Moshe was afraid, and goes on to say that the matter has become known.

Rashi gives two explanations for Moshe's fear. The first is in keeping with the simple implication of the Torah. His earlier actions became public knowledge! His second explanation follows the Midrashic explanation. Since Jews were fighting with each other, he was afraid that perhaps they did not deserve to be redeemed!

The Rebbe asks why Rashi felt a need to give two different explanations. The first explanation seems to fit in fine with the simple interpretation of the verse. Explaining Peshat is precisely Rashi's primary objective! In this case, it is especially difficult to understand, because according to the Midrashic explanation Rashi needs to explain the end of the verse, "the matter has become known," homiletically as well. Aside from the simple meaning, he also needs to add that Moshe was the one who knew, he became aware of why the Jews, among all of the nations of the world, deserved such a severe punishment!

The explanation is that Rashi uses the Midrashic explanation to answer a different question. Why does the Torah tell us that Moshe was afraid? What does it teach us? It seems to be entirely irrelevant. Rashi uses the Midrash to explain its relevance.

The Rebbe goes on to reconcile the verse according to its simple meaning. He also combines the concept of absolute trust in G-d with the fear of worldly matters.

Rashi's Explanation

This week we begin reading Shemos, the second book of the Torah. The Torah tells us of Moshe's birth and his upbringing in Paroh's palace. The Torah tells us that¹ "... Moshe grew up and went out to his brothers (his fellow Jews) ...he saw an Egyptian man strike a Hebrew man. He (Moshe) struck the Egyptian man. Moshe went out the next day ...and said to the wicked man...why will you hit your friend? He responded ...do you plan to kill me as you killed the Egyptian? Moshe became frightened and said, 'The matter has become known.' Paroh heard of this occurrence ...and wanted to execute Moshe; Moshe fled. "

Rashi cites the words "Moshe became frightened" and gives two explanations. The first is that the verse should be explained: "according to its simple meaning." In other words, Rashi is saying that Moshe was afraid that Paroh would kill him. The second explanation Rashi offers is that the verse is to be explained "according to the Midrash." Moshe was worried because he saw wicked people, informers, in Israel. He said that since this is the case, perhaps they do not deserve to be redeemed."

Difficulties in Understanding Rashi

Why isn't Rashi satisfied with his first explanation? We find a general rule in Rashi's commentary to the Torah that when he brings two different reasons for the same thing, there is some difficulty in each of them. However, the explanation he cites first is closer to Peshat. Furthermore, there does not seem to be anything lacking in his first explanation. Moshe was frightened because he discovered that what he had done to the Egyptian man had become public knowledge. Why did Rashi also find it necessary to cite a Midrashic explanation "that Moshe was worried ...that perhaps the Jews did not deserve to be redeemed." The verse does not even hint at the Midrash's account².

THE RASHI OF THE WEEK

It is especially problematic to explain our verse according to the Midrash. In the very same verse, after telling us that Moshe was afraid, Moshe says that "the matter has become known." According to Peshat, these words present no problem. Moshe was fearful because of the death of the Egyptian man had become known. However, if we are explaining the verse according to the Midrash, these words are challenging to understand. What is the meaning of the phrase that "the matter has become known?" This difficulty forced Rashi to explain that the words "the matter has become known" (in his second Midrashic explanation) that he, Moshe, knew why the Jews from among all of the nations of the world deserve such a severe punishment. This is also a seemingly difficult explanation, which the verse does not seem to suggest.

The Explanation

The explanation to these apparent difficulties is as follows. Rashi is using the Midrash in order to answer a question which one may ask regarding our verse. Namely, why does the Torah tell us that "Moshe was afraid and said that the matter has become known?"

The Torah is not a history book. It is not meant to give us a chronological accounting of what happened. Rather, it provides each one of us with an "owner's manual" for our lives. It teaches us how to live. In as much as his fear did not instigate any action on Moshe's part, why should the Torah tell us that he was afraid? It was only later when the news of what Moshe had done reached Paroh that Moshe left Egypt and fled to Midian. The discovery that Paroh heard what had happened was the reason that he wanted to execute him. Why does the Torah tell this to us at this point? What does it teach us? In what way is it relevant to us?

That is why Rashi quotes the Midrash. According to the Midrash, we understand the benefit of the Torah telling us that Moshe was afraid. We now understand that his fear was because he now had a reason to suspect that perhaps the Jews did not deserve to be redeemed from Egypt.

A Deeper Lesson from Rashi

However, looking at the simple understanding of Rashi, there is still one difficulty remaining. There is a rule of the Sages that³ "a verse in Scripture always maintains its simple meaning." No matter how many layers of explanation we have for every letter of Torah, the simple meaning applies. This rule is especially apparent here, where Rashi cites the Peshat before the Midrash. The Torah must be teaching later be freed. G-d's covenant should have been enough to assuage any fear which Moshe may have had regarding the redemption of the Jews!

us something according to Peshat by telling us that Moshe was afraid.

To explain this, we must first preface the words of the Midrash⁴ on the verse,⁵ “Yaakov was very frightened and was distressed.” The Midrash says that “R’ Pinchas said in the name of R’ Reuven, there were two people who were assured (of success) by G-d, and nevertheless were afraid. (One was) the choicest of our forefathers and the other was the greatest of our prophets. The greatest of our forefathers was Yaakov... Hashem said to him,⁶ ‘Behold I am with you,’ and nevertheless, he was afraid, as it says ‘and Yaakov feared.’ The greatest prophet was Moshe... G-d said to him,⁷ ‘For I will be with you,’ and he was (also) afraid, as it says⁸ (regarding Og the king of Bashan) ‘Hashem said to Moshe, do not fear him.’ Hashem would not have told him not to fear, had he not been afraid.”

The commentaries of the Midrash disagree about whether the Torah is telling us something positive, i.e., something which we should emulate, or not. Perhaps the Midrash is teaching us how not to behave.

According to some commentaries, both Yaakov and Moshe did not rely on an explicit promise from G-d due to their humility. They were afraid that perhaps they had sinned, and hence no longer deserved the fulfillment of Hashem's promise.

On the other hand, other commentaries explain that the Midrash is telling us that the proper form of conduct is not to fear, but rather always to be confident in G-d. The continuation of the Midrash itself implies this. The prophet scolds the Jewish people and tells us,⁹ “And you forgot Hashem your Maker ... and you constantly fear the entire day.” In other words, the prophet is rebuking the Jews for being afraid.

These opinions require analysis. Why should it be “proper not to fear?” Why should we not be concerned that sin may have caused one to lose a Divine promise? Why should this be considered a lack in their perfection? On the contrary, this attitude seems to display great humility. Despite one's great righteousness, he is concerned that he may have sinned!

These questions are answered by the commandment which we are given throughout the Torah to trust in G-d. We must believe that He has the power to save us from any situation, no matter how hopeless it may seem. However, the commandment to have trust in G-d is not merely to believe that what He does is in one's best interest, whether it seems so or not. Instead, it is to be confident that he will help me in a revealed manner. I must be sure of His salvation, to the extent that I have no concerns or worries whatsoever. I must continuously have total peace of mind.

The classic work Chovos HaLevovos¹⁰ explains this. He writes that¹¹ “the essence of trust is the total peace of mind of one who trusts in Hashem. His heart must rely on the One in Whom he trusts, that He will do that which is good and proper for him.”

We still need to understand why, indeed, Hashem should treat us with absolute, revealed kindness, even though we may not be worthy. Our need to trust that G-d will shower us with goodness can be explained in light of the famous aphorism often stated by the leaders of Chabad – Lubavitch; "Think positively, and the result will be positive." In short, the explanation is that by the very merit of total trust in G-d, He brings about a positive outcome.
